First Block in Column 1

Typically, an introduction would go here. Note that the length of a column is determined by the length of the blocks in the column.

Second Block in Column 1

More text goes here. Note that the length of a column would be determined by the number of blocks and their length. If the “buffer” option is specified in the RHITposter theme, then each column can be flush at the bottom by inserting a blank box that has width smaller than the block and height equal to the textheight. The block will technically run off the page, but with the buffer, it will create a border that looks like it stopped just shy of the bottom of the page.

This block lines up with the first block in column 1.

Second Block in Column 2

Without the blank box, the column would end early making them not flush with one another.

First Block in Column 3

Last column.

Last Block

References are typically entered here. They must be entered by hand, but can be referenced as using the “cite” command as usual: Reference [1] and [2].
